Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
OCT 15 1976
MICHAEL RODAK, JR., CLERK

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1976

No. 76-531

ARKANSAS DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Petitioner

v.

FAIRFIELD COMMUNITIES LAND COMPANY,
Respondent

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF ARKANSAS

JAMES E. YOUNGDAHL
2101 Main Street
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206

SILAS H. BREWER, JR.
JOHN H. WARNDOF
Capitol Hill Building
Little Rock, Arkansas 72201
Counsel for Petitioner

Of Counsel:

CATHERINE C. HARRIS
YOUNGDAHL, LARRISON & AGEE
2101 Main Street
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206

St. Louis Law Printing Co., Inc., 812 Olive Street 63101 314-231-4477

INDEX

	Page
Opinions Below	1
Jurisdiction	1
Question Presented	2
Statutory Provisions Involved	2
Statement of the Case	2
Reasons for Granting the Writ	4
Conclusion	14
Appendix A: Opinions Below	A-1
Appendix B: Statutes Involved	A-9
Appendix C: Administrative Regulations Involved	A-12

TABLE OF CITATIONS

Cases:

Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commn. v. Continental Air Lines, Inc., 372 U.S. 714 (1963)	9
Griggs v. Duke Power Co., 401 U.S. 424 (1971)	7
Homemakers, Inc. v. Division of Industrial Welfare, 509 F.2d 20 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. denied sub nom. California Dept. of Industrial Relations v. Homemakers, Inc., 96 Sup. Ct. 803 (1976)	3, 5, 8, 9, 12, 13
McDonald v. Santa Fe Trail Transp. Co., 96 Sup. Ct. 2574 (1976)	8
Orr v. Frank R. MacNeill & Son, Inc., 511 F.2d 166 (5th Cir. 1975)	12

Potlatch Forests, Inc. v. Hays, 318 F.Supp. 1368 (E.D. Ark. 1970), affd. sub nom. Hays v. Potlatch Forests, Inc., 465 F.2d 1081 (8th Cir. 1972) 3, 5, 6, 8, 12, 13

Rosenfeld v. Southern Pac. Co., 444 F.2d 1219 (9th Cir. 1971) 4

Schultz v. Wheaton Glass Co., 421 F.2d 259 (3d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 398 U.S. 905 (1970) 12

State v. Crowe, 197 S.W. 4 (Ark. 1917) 6

Ward v. Board of Commnrs., 253 U.S. 17 (1920) 6

West Coast Hotel v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937) 6

Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357 (1927) 3

Statutes:

Arkansas Act 70 of 1943 4

ARK. STAT. ANN. § 81-601 (Repl. 1960) 2, 3

ARK. STAT. ANN. § 81-612 (Repl. 1960) 2

Equal Pay Act of 1963, 29 U.S.C. § 206(d) 2, 5, 11

Title VII, Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e, et seq. 3

28 U.S.C. § 1257(3) 1

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a) 2

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(n) 11

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-7 10

42 U.S.C. §2000h-4 .....2, 10

Other Material:

Ark. Legis. Dig. 5

Brown, etc., The Equal Rights Amendment: A Constitutional Basis for Equal Rights for Women, 80 YALE L.J. 871 (1971) 14

Comment, Employment Practices and Sex Discrimination: Judicial Extension of Beneficial Female Protective Laws, 59 CORN. L. REV. 133 (1973) 4, 13

Comment, Extension Versus Invalidation of Underinclusive Statutes: A Remedial Alternative, 12 COLUM. J. LAW & SOC. PROBL. 115 (1975) 13

Developments in the Law, Employment Discrimination and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 84 HARV. L. REV. 1109 (1971) 7, 10, 13

Kanowitz, Sex-Based Discrimination in American Law III: Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the Equal Pay Act of 1963, 20 HAST. L.J. 305 (1968) 4, 10, 13

29 C.F.R. § 800.162 8

29 C.F.R. § 1604.2(b)(3) 8

29 C.F.R. § 1604.8(b) 12

110 CONG. REC. 2580 (1964) 10

110 CONG. REC. 2583 (1964) 11

110 CONG. REC. 2584 (1964) 11

118 CONG. REC. 1677 (1972) 13

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1976

No. .....

ARKANSAS DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Petitioner

v.

FAIRFIELD COMMUNITIES LAND COMPANY,
Respondent

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF ARKANSAS

The Arkansas Department of Labor petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of Arkansas entered in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The majority and dissenting opinions of the Supreme Court of Arkansas appear in Appendix A hereto. They are reported at 538 S.W.2d 698 and 538 S.W.2d 700.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Arkansas was entered on July 19, 1976, and this petition for certiorari is filed within 90 days of that date. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1257(3).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether an Arkansas statute which requires payment of premium pay for overtime work to female employees is invalid under the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution of the United States in view of the ban on sex discrimination in employment contained in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and other federal law?

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

ARK. STAT. ANN. § 81-601 (Repl. 1960), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-2(a), 2000e-7, and 2000h-4, 29 U.S.C. § 206(d)(1), and the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution of the United States appear in Appendix B hereto.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On February 8, 1973, the Arkansas Department of Labor filed a civil action in a state trial court against Fairfield Communities Land Company, seeking a total of $3,674.04 in unpaid wages for 170 female employees of the defendant.

The obligations which the employer was alleged to have violated are contained in ARK. STAT. ANN. § 81-601 (Repl. 1960), requiring that female employees be paid time and one-half for all hours worked over eight in one day and on the seventh consecutive day in one week.[1]

---

[1] The Arkansas Department of Labor is responsible for enforcing the overtime obligations by civil suit. ARK. STAT. ANN. § 81-612 (Repl. 1960).

In an amended answer the employer asserted that the Arkansas statute was invalid because of the preemptive effect of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e, et seq. On the pleadings and a stipulated record, the trial court dismissed the complaint; the Department appealed to the Supreme Court of Arkansas.

A majority of the highest state court affirmed the dismissal because the "statute undoubtedly discriminates in favor of women on the sole basis of their sex."[2] 538 S.W.2d at 699. It declined to follow a different application of the same Arkansas statute by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in Hays v. Potlatch Forests, Inc., 465 F.2d 1081 (8th Cir. 1972), and relied instead on a Ninth Circuit decision invalidating a similar California statute, Homemakers, Inc. v. Division of Industrial Welfare, 509 F.2d 20 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. denied sub nom. California Dept. of Industrial Relations v. Homemakers, Inc., 96 Sup. Ct. 803 (1976).

The dissenting justice believed the Potlatch result superior to that of Homemakers; "the choice is between invalidating the Arkansas statute and lowering wages for female employees or holding the statute valid and equalizing benefits between male and female employees." 538 S.W.2d at 701.

---

[2] Although there had been a contention that the federal question was not properly before the Supreme Court of Arkansas, the court expressly held that it was. 538 S.W.2d at 699. Cf. Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 360-61 (1927). To some degree another requirement of ARK. STAT. ANN. § 81-601 (Repl. 1960), that permits be obtained before an employer treats female employees in certain ways, also was an original issue below, but this petition is directed only at that central portion of the decision which invalidated the overtime wage requirements. Compare California Dept. of Industrial Relations v. Homemakers, Inc., 96 Sup. Ct. 803, 803-04, n. 1 (1976) (dissent).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

1. There Is a Major Unresolved Conflict of Legal Authority Concerning the Validity of State Legislation Which Benefits Female Employees in Relation to Federal Legislation Which Prohibits Sex Discrimination in Employment.

A. Arkansas Supreme Court v. Eighth Circuit

The Arkansas statute in question is one of several kinds,[3] in many states,[4] which benefit women as employees.[5] Its original version was passed in 1915; it has been amended eleven times[6] by the Arkansas General Assembly.

In the most serious previous judicial challenge a large Arkansas employer sought an injunction against its enforcement on the theory that it was preempted by Title VII. The District Court dismissed the complaint, and the Eighth Circuit affirmed.

---

[3] The most apparent beneficial statutes are those which provide for minimum wage levels for straight time or overtime work; those which require rest periods, lunch breaks, or minimum rest room facilities may be in the same category. See Kanowitz, Sex-Based Discrimination in American Law III: Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the Equal Pay Act of 1963, 20 HAST. L.J. 305, 320-44 (1968).

[4] For an indication of the range of state statutes see Comment, Employment Practices and Sex Discrimination: Judicial Extension of Beneficial Female Protective Laws, 59 CORN. L. REV. 133, n. 1 (1973).

[5] Clearly statutes which expressly or in effect deny women employment opportunity are not beneficial and by virtue of Title VII are invalid. E.g., Rosenfeld v. Southern Pac. Co., 444 F.2d 1219 (9th Cir. 1971).

[6] Arkansas Act 191 of 1915 was amended in 1919, 1921, 1931, 1935, 1937, 1943 (twice), 1955 (twice), 1963 and 1968. Premium pay for females working over eight hours a day was added by Act 70 of 1943.

Potlach Forests, Inc. v. Hays, 318 F. Supp. 1368 (E.D. Ark. 1970), affmd. sub nom. Hays v. Potlach Forests, Inc., 465 F. 2d 1081 (8th Cir. 1972).

In the leading expression of the principle, the Eighth Circuit relied upon express congressional disclaimer of preemption (465 F.2d at 1082), clear direction of the closely related Equal Pay Act of 1963, 29 U.S.C. §206(d)(1), not to lower wages to achieve equality (Id. at 1083), formal codification of Equal Employment Opportunity Commission expertise in favor of extension rather than elimination of benefits (Id. at 1083-84), and the fact that "no unreasonable burdens are imposed by extending the benefits of the Arkansas statute to male employees" (Id. at 1084).

The opinion concluded by quoting from the District Court:

> The financial burden thus placed upon Potlatch may seem onerous, but federal labor legislation enacted over the last thirty odd years has placed many onerous burdens on employers. It is open to Arkansas employers generally to seek repeal of Act 191 of 1915.[7] It is open to Potlach as an individual employer to rearrange its working schedules so that nobody works more than eight hours a day until all employees have worked their first forty hours in a workweek.

Id. at 1084.

The majority opinion of the Arkansas Supreme Court discussed Potlatch at length,[8] but found the Homemakers view

---

[7] And indeed they have. Since 1970 at least six unsuccessful attempts have been made to amend the overtime pay requirement. Ark. Legis. Dig. H-N-43 (1971), H-N-22 (1973), S-N-23 (1973), H-N-14 (1975), H-N-22 (1975), H-N-24 (1975).

[8] "We are unable to agree with the Potlatch opinions, because we think they oversimplify the issue." 538 S.W. 2d at 699. The "com-of the Ninth Circuit more persuasive. In prime circular reasoning, Justice Smith concluded:

> The Supreme Court now holds that an act which discriminates between men and women is invalid as a denial of the equal protection of the law unless there is a reasonable basis for the distinction. Reed v. Reed, 494 U.S. 71 . . . (1971). Hence Act 191 is now prima facie invalid, because with respect to many office and clerical jobs[9] there is no sound reason for paying time-and-a-half overtime to women while denying it to men. Of course it follows that if the Arkansas act is now invalid, its benefits cannot simply be extended to male employees under the Potlatch rationale.

538 S.W.2d at 700.

The dissent found the issue to have been "decided" in Potlatch, especially in view of the "conflict between the circuits" with Arkansas in the validating circuit. Id. at 700, n. 1. Citing "ample precedent to support the judicial extension of benefits" Justice Roy declared:

> For compelling reasons the Arkansas overtime act should be preserved. It is a law which serves untold numbers of working people. Neither repeal of the law nor judicial legislation is necessary, but a fair and reasonable accommodation is warranted. Any conceivable disharmony between the State and Federal laws may be fairly accommodated by adopting the extension of benefits rule. There is nothing more fundamental to the welfare of the Arkansas citizenry than adequate wages, and nothing more essential than the law's even application in this vital area. To uphold the existing law would produce the proper balance by preserving its benefits while fulfilling Title VII's promise of fair employment practices.

Id. at 701.

plication" discussed by the majority was the surmise that in 1917, when the original statute was upheld, it "would not have been sustained had it merely regulated wages and hours." Id. at 700. Any federal constitutional theory on which such conclusion could be based was destroyed by West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937). No legitimate state ground could thereby exist because when the cited case, State v. Crowe, 197 S.W. 4 (Ark. 1917), was decided the overtime premium pay provision in question was not even part of the statute; it was not added until 1943. See note 6, supra. Cf., Ward v. Board of Commnrs., 253 U.S. 17, 22-23 (1920).

[9] The record contains no reference to "office and clerical jobs."

B. Arkansas Supreme Court v. Federal Administrative Agencies

The majority decision of the Supreme Court of Arkansas also is in conflict with regulations of the agencies charged with administration of the federal statutes involved.[10]

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission guidelines, entitled to "great deference"[11] in interpretation of the Act, include:

> A number of states require that minimum wage and premium pay for overtime be provided for female employees. An employer will be deemed to have engaged in an unlawful employment practice if:
>
> (i) It refuses to hire or otherwise adversely affects the employment opportunities of female applicants or employees in order to avoid the payment of minimum wages or overtime pay required by state law; or

[10] The regulations are reprinted as Appendix C herein. See Developments in the Law, Employment Discrimination and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 84 HARV. L. REV. 1109, 1187-88 (1971).

[11] Griggs v. Duke Power Co., 401 U.S. 424, 433-34 (1971).

(ii) It does not provide the same benefits for male employees.

29 C.F.R. § 1604.2(b)(3).[12]

The Secretary of Labor has considered the validity of such state statutes in light of the Equal Pay Act of 1963, a closely related federal enactment:

> If as a result of State law, female employees in an employer's establishment are paid overtime premiums for hours worked in excess of a prescribed maximum in any workday or workweek, the employer must pay male employees performing equal work in such establishment the same overtime premiums when they work such excess hours . . . .

29 C.F.R. § 800.162.

C. Eighth Circuit v. Ninth Circuit

The Potlatch result in the Eighth Circuit was considered by the Ninth Circuit in Homemakers, Inc. v. Division of Industrial Welfare, supra, involving a similar California statute.

As its first ground for decision, the court refused to follow Potlatch because "it would usurp the legislative power vested exclusively in the state." 509 F.2d at 22.

Certiorari was denied, with two members of this Court issuing a dissent:

---

[12] Thus speculation that the Arkansas statute might discourage employers from employing women (see Hays v. Potlatch Forests, Inc., supra, 465 F.2d at 1082, n. 3), is no ground for invalidating it as that response itself would be an unlawful employment practice. There is nothing in the instant record to indicate such phenomenon. Males, when disadvantaged, also have Title VII protection. Cf. McDonald v. Santa Fe Trail Transp. Co., 96 Sup. Ct. 2574 (1976).

> These are substantial questions, and it is the Court's duty to resolve this disagreement which now impedes the important process of reconciling the federal statutes outlawing sex-based discrimination in employment with numerous "protective" state employment laws applicable only to female employees.

96 Sup. Ct. at 804.

Although an alternative ground for the Homemakers decision was the fact that during the interval between District Court and Circuit Court consideration the California legislature amended the statute to moot the question to some degree (509 F.2d at 23), evidence of the continuing viability of the Ninth Circuit rule is its use by the Arkansas majority in the instant case.

2. Congress Did Not Intend to Lower the Wages of Female Employees as a Consequence of Remedying Sex Discrimination in Employment.

It would require an extraordinary clear expression of congressional intent to permit a conclusion that Congress meant to lower the wages of women—the necessary consequence of the decision below—when it banned sex discrimination in employment. No such expression, or even implication, is available.

Obviously Congress has the power to exercise exclusive control over the wage levels of employees of employers in interstate commerce. But Congress is not compelled to occupy a whole field; judicial treatment of a supersession contention requires measurement of the occupation. E.g., Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commn. v. Continental Air Lines, Inc., 372 U.S. 714, 722-24 (1963).

The best test of what Congress intended is what Congress said. Two anti-preemption statements are contained in the Civil Rights Act of 1964. As part of Title VII:

> Nothing in this subchapter shall be deemed to exempt or relieve any person from any liability, duty, penalty, or punishment provided by any present or future law of any State or political subdivision of a State, other than any such law which purports to require or permit the doing of any act which would be unlawful employment practice under this subchapter.

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-7.[13]

Admittedly the legislative history of the ban on sex discrimination is "peculiar."[14] But there is distinct evidence that leading supporters of the inclusion intended to preserve state legislation that is beneficial to women. A dichotomy was described by Congresswoman Griffiths:

> Some people have suggested to me that labor opposed "no discrimination on account of sex" because they feel that through the years protective legislation has been built up to safeguard the health of women. Some protective legislation was to safeguard the health of women, but it should have safeguarded the health of men, also. Most of the so-called protective legislation has really been to protect men's rights in better paying jobs.

110 CONG. REC. 2580 (1964). (Emphasis added.)

Congresswoman St. George addressed herself directly to the effect of the amendment on state protective legislation, quoting her prior Rules Committee colloquy with ranking Congressman McCulloch:

---

[13] The intention is reemphasized by another provision applicable to the entire Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000h-4.

[14] Kanowitz, supra, note 3, at 310. There were no committee reports on the sex discrimination amendment. It was added on the House floor, in an apparent attempt to defeat the entire bill. Developments in the Law, supra note 10, at 1167.

> MRS. ST. GEORGE. So, this is really being written for those 18 States [which did not have equal employment opportunity legislation], to all intents and purposes, because we already have this, so this will not make any very great difference to us, except if it supersedes the law of the State. Is it going to do that?
>
> MR. MCCULLOUGH. It is not intended to supersede the laws of the States, except when it is in conflict and grants or insures lesser rights than are provided for in this legislation.

Ibid. (Emphasis added.)

After referring to such comments of Congresswoman St. George, Congresswoman Kelly concluded:

> I believe in equality for woman, and am sure that the acceptance of the amendment will not repeal the protective laws of the several States. I therefore urge all to support this amendment and hope it will prevail.

Id. at 2583. It did, the same day. Id. at 2584.

An even more distinct command of Congress is applicable. The substantive section of the Equal Pay Act of 1963 includes a proviso: "an employer who is paying a wage rate differential in violation of this subsection shall not, in order to comply with the provisions of this subsection, reduce the wage rate of any employee." 29 U.S.C. § 206(d)(1).

There are substantial reasons to conclude that Title VII must be read in light of this condition.

Title VII refers expressly to a relationship with the Equal Pay Act of 1963. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(h). Because of that section, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has decided, "a defense based on the Equal Pay Act may be raised in a proceeding under Title VII." 29 C.F.R. § 1604.8(b).

"Although the Civil Rights Act is much broader than the Equal Pay Act, its provisions regarding discrimination based on sex are in pari materia with the Equal Pay Act." Shultz v. Wheaton Glass Co., 421 F.2d 259, 266 (3d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 398 U.S. 905 (1970). Conversely, "[t]he sex discrimination provisions of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 must be construed in harmony with the Equal Pay Act of 1963 . . . ." Orr v. Frank R. MacNeill & Son, Inc., 511 F.2d 166, 170 (5th Cir. 1975). See also Hays v. Potlatch Forests, Inc., supra, 465 F.2d at 1083; California Dept. of Industrial Relations v. Homemakers, Inc., supra, 96 Sup. Ct. at 804, no. 2.

Finally, during consideration of amendments to Title VII for the Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1972, the following Senate colloquy took place:

MR. HART. . . . Mr. President, the Equal Pay Act of 1963 was the first Federal law enacted by the Congress to prohibit wage discrimination on the basis of sex. It has enjoyed widespread support, and we should make explicit the fact that Congress does not intend the Equal Pay Act to be affected by proposals to expand and strengthen Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Senate Labor Committee if he will confirm my understanding that it is not the will or desire of this body that the Equal Pay Act of 1963 be superseded in whole or in part by any action taken by the Congress to provide most sorely needed amendments to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act.

MR. WILLIAMS. . . . I certainly want to make the situation very clear here today. The distinguished Senator from Michigan is correct in his assumption that it is not our intention in any way to affect or diminish the remedies available under the Equal Pay Act of 1963.

118 CONG. REC. 1677 (1972).[15]

Thus Congress did not intend by federal legislation to lower the wages of women as a method of remedying sex discrimination. The "federal preemption" on which the Supreme Court of Arkansas relied cannot be demonstrated.[16]

---

[15] This exchange occurred after the District Court decision in Potlatch but before any decision in Homemakers. The Arkansas statute in issue also describes a relationship with the Fair Labor Standards Act, of which the Equal Pay Act is a part.

[16] Most of the voluminous writing on the issue has dealt with jurisprudential aspects of an "extension of benefits" theory, and the majority view has been that beneficial laws should be extended. E.g., articles cited in notes 3, 4, 10, 16, 17. Such characterization is subsumed when the intention of Congress is ascertainable. However, as can be discussed in detail on full review, this Court has "extended benefits" in many other situations. Comment, Extension versus Invalidation of Underinclusive Statutes: A Remedial Alternative, 12 COLUM. J. LAW & SOC. PROBL. 115 (1975). The Solicitor General, for the EEOC, urged certiorari and extension in Homemakers.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated,[17] a writ should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

ARKANSAS DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
CHARLES L. DANIELS, DIRECTOR

By:

JAMES E. YOUNGDAHL
2101 Main Street
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206

SILAS H. BREWER, JR.
JOHN H. WARNDOF
Capitol Hill Building
Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

Counsel for Petitioner

Of Counsel:

CATHERINE C. HARRIS
YOUNGDAHL, LARRISON & AGEE
2101 Main Street
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206
October 14, 1976

---

[17] In addition, by full review the Court can perform a vital national service by clarifying projected effects of the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. A major issue between those for and against adoption concerns whether "protective" laws for women will be invalidated or extended to men. See, e.g., Brown, etc., The Equal Rights Amendment: A Constitutional Basis for Equal Rights for Women, 80 YALE L.J. 871, 912-36 (1971). Advocates, state legislatures, and the people need to know the accurate consequences of their pending decision.

APPENDIX

APPENDIX A: OPINIONS BELOW

STATE OF ARKANSAS, Appellant,

v.

FAIRFIELD COMMUNITIES LAND CO.,
Appellee.

No. 76-46.

Supreme Court of Arkansas.

July 19, 1976.

GEORGE ROSE SMITH, Justice.

This action was brought in the name of the State by the Director of Labor, on behalf of a number of the appellee's female employees, to recover overtime wages that assertedly should have been paid under Act 191 of 1915, as amended. Ark.Stat. Ann. § 81-601 et seq. (Repl.1960). The appellee contends that the Arkansas statute is no longer valid, having been pre-empted, under the Supremacy Clause, by this provision in the Civil Rights Act of 1964:

> It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer . . . to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's . . . sex." [42 U.S.C.A. § 2000e-2.]

This appeal is from a judgment sustaining the appellee's position and dismissing the complaint.

At the outset it is insisted by the appellant, for the first time, that the circuit court did not have jurisdiction of the subject matter, because the proof does not show that the Civil Rights Act is applicable to the appellee, as an employer. That is, it is not shown that the appellee is engaged in an industry affecting interstate commerce, with 15 or more employees and a specified annual volume of business, as required by federal legislation.

That argument is not sound. Our circuit courts, unlike the federal courts, are tribunals of general jurisdiction with constitutional authority over all cases not within the exclusive jurisdiction of another court. Ark. Const., Art. 7, § 11 (1874); Whittaker v. Watson, 68 Ark. 555, 60 S.W. 652 (1901). Here the Director of Labor, as plaintiff, selected the forum himself. The circuit court unquestionably has prima facie jurisdiction of an action for the recovery of unpaid wages. The appellee merely pleaded the impact of the Civil Rights Act as a defense to the action. If the plaintiff thought that the defendant was not entitled to invoke the Act, that issue should have been raised in the trial court. But the issue was not jurisdictional, because even if the defendant had not been entitled to invoke the Act the case would still have proceeded to judgment. For all we know, the plaintiff may have known that the defendant came within the Act and may simply have decided not to encumber the record with needless proof. Thus the appellant has no standing to raise the issue here, subject-matter jurisdiction not being involved.

Now, the merits. Our statute undoubtedly discriminates in favor of women on the sole basis of their sex. The employer must pay time-and-a-half overtime when the work day exceeds eight hours or the work week six days. Ark.Stat.Ann. § 81-601. There is no similar provision for male employees. It is fair to assume that an employer might therefore decide to hire a man rather than a woman, both being qualified. The appellee accordingly argues that our statute conflicts with the federal law, which prohibits any discrimination in hiring or in the terms of employment, on the basis of sex.

In answer to that argument the appellant relies upon the opinions in Potlatch Forests v. Hays, 318 F.Supp. 1368 (E.D.Ark. 1970), and Hays v. Potlatch Forests, 465 F.2d 1081 (8th Cir. 1972), affirming the district court. Those cases upheld the Arkansas statute, upon the ground that the employer could comply with both the federal act and the state act simply by paying overtime to both men and women at the rate specified in the Arkansas statute. An essentially contrary view was taken in Homemakers, Inc., Los Angeles v. Division of Indus. Welf., 356 F.Supp. 1111 (N.D.Cal.1973), affirmed, 509 F.2d 20 (9th Cir. 1974). Those courts held, as did the trial judge in the case at bar, that for a court to extend the benefits of the state statute by requiring men to be paid at a statutory scale applicable only to women would be an exercise of legislative rather than judicial power.

We are unable to agree with the Potlatch opinions, because we think they oversimplify the issue. In Potlatch both courts treated the Arkansas statute as a wages-and-hours law having as its sole purpose the payment of female employees at time-and-a-half for overtime. Neither opinion mentions other aspects of the Arkansas law which we think to be of controlling weight.

The original 1915 statute had several provisions linking wages with the health of the female employees protected by the act. For example, the act created a three-member commission whose duty it was to adopt regulations making it certain that women would not be employed "at a lower rate of wages than will supply said female employees the cost of proper living, and safeguard their health and welfare." Act 191 of 1915, §§ 9 and 11. A 1935 amendment to the statute gave to a commission the power to issue, after a hearing, permits exempting from the statute females in executive or managerial positions. Act 150 of 1935; Ark.Stat.Ann. § 81-606. A 1943 amendment provided that no female could be employed for overtime of a permanent nature in excess of one hour a day without a permit from the Commissioner of Labor. Act 70 of 1943; Ark.Stat.Ann. § 81-601.

It must be emphasized that the constitutionality of Act 191 was upheld on the ground that it was a reasonable method of safeguarding the health of female employees. State v. Crowe, 130 Ark. 272, 197 S.W. 4, L.R.A.1918A, 567, Ann.Cas. 1918D, 460 (1917). The majority and dissenting opinions in that case indicate clearly that the statute would not have been sustained had it merely regulated wages and hours, without regard to the health of the female employees.

In the intervening 60 years the pendulum has swung far in the opposite direction. The Supreme Court now holds that an act which discriminates between men and women is invalid as a denial of the equal protection of the law unless there is a reasonable basis for the distinction. Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71, 92 S.Ct. 251, 30 L.Ed.2d 225 (1971). Hence Act 191 is now prima facie invalid, because with respect to many office and clerical jobs there is no sound reason for paying time-and-a-half overtime to women while denying it to men. Of course it follows that if the Arkansas act is now invalid, its benefits cannot simply be extended to male employees under the Potlatch rationale.

The Director of Labor advances two theories in his effort to have Act 191, as amended, continued in force. First, it was stipulated below that although the Department of Labor still issues permits under the act, it no longer conducts hearings under §§ 81-606 and -607 to determine whether the particular female employee actually exercises executive or managerial authority. One short answer to this argument is that the discriminatory provision is still in the statute, whether the Department obeys it or not. A second answer is that the stipulation does not touch upon the equally questionable permit requirement in § 81-601, by which a permit must be obtained for any permanent overtime employment of a female in excess of one hour a day.

The Director's second suggestion is that the permit provisions and other discriminatory sections of Act 191, as amended, be held unconstitutional but separable, leaving in effect a simple wages-and-hours law that would benefit male employees under Potlatch. What we have already said pretty well answers this argument. Separability means that the legislature would have enacted the valid portion of the act even if it had known the rest to be invalid. But just the opposite is true here. In Crowe we sustained Act 191 only because it was considered to be a health measure rather than a mere regulation of wages as such. We could not with even a semblance of judicial integrity completely reverse our position and solemnly declare that the legislature would have adopted Act 191 as a mere wage regulation without regard to the very provisions that saved the statute from unconstitutionality at the time it was passed.

Affirmed.

ROY, J., dissents.

ELSIJANE TRIMBLE ROY, Justice (dissenting).

I disagree with the majority's opinion that the pertinent Arkansas statute is no longer valid. In my opinion, this issue was decided in Potlatch Forests v. Hays, 318 F.Supp. 1368 (E.D. Ark.1970), and Hays v. Potlatch Forests, 465 F.2d 1081 (8th Cir. 1972), affirming the district court. As noted in the majority opinion, those cases upheld the Arkansas statute upon the ground that the employer could comply with both the Federal act and the State act by paying overtime to both men and women at the rate specified in the Arkansas statute.

The majority refused to follow the Potlatch cases and cited Homemakers, Inc., Los Angeles v. Division of Indus. Welf., 356 F.Supp. 1111 (N.D.Cal.1973); affirmed, 509 F.2d 20 (9th Cir. 1974), as authority for holding the Arkansas statute invalid even though it differed materially from the California statute. Furthermore, the logic in the Homemakers decision is not as sound as the Potlatch[1] rationale, since to apply the Homemakers doctrine would thwart the purpose of both the State and Federal statutes. Here, the choice is between invalidating the Arkansas statute and lowering wages for female employees or holding the statute valid and equalizing benefits between male and female employees. Extension of wage benefits to men by virtue of the Federal enactment is consistent with the presumption of constitutionality as to both the Arkansas law and the Civil Rights Law of 1964.

The Eighth Circuit in its Potlatch opinion stated:

> We agree with the District Court that Congress expressly disclaimed any general preemptive intent in enacting Title VII, and that the Arkansas statute can be held invalid only if it is in conflict with the Civil Rights Act. See, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-7 and 2000h-4 [italics supplied].
>
> Insofar as the Arkansas statute results in discrimination against men, we also agree with the trial court that conflict with Title VII can be avoided by requiring Potlatch to pay its male employees the same premium overtime rate which it is compelled to pay its female employees. As the trial court pointed out:
>
> "* * *
>
> "As far as Act 191 of 1915 [Ark.Stat.Ann. § 81-601] is concerned, an employer can comply with it and with the Civil Rights Act by paying daily overtime to both men and women, * * *. The Arkansas statute does not say that women must be paid more than men; it simply says that they must be paid daily overtime without making a similar requirement as to men [italics supplied]."

[1] Normally if there is a conflict between the circuits on an issue of law Arkansas courts give preference to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals interpretation since Arkansas is one of the states in that circuit.

For compelling reasons the Arkansas overtime act should be preserved. It is a law which serves untold numbers of working people. Neither repeal of the law nor judicial legislation is necessary, but a fair and reasonable accommodation is warranted. Any conceivable disharmony between the State and Federal laws may be fairly accommodated by adopting the extension of benefits rule. There is nothing more fundamental to the welfare of the Arkansas citizenry than adequate wages, and nothing more essential than the law's even application in this vital area. To uphold the existing law would produce the proper balance by preserving its benefits while fulfilling Title VII's promise of fair employment practices.

Furthermore, there is ample precedent to support the judicial extension of benefits. Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 93 S.Ct. 1764, 36 L.Ed.2d 583 (1973), and Moritz v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 469 F.2d 466 (10th Cir. 1972).

Objections are also made to the Arkansas act on the grounds that the permit requirements are invalid and consequently the entire statute must fall. We do not agree with the conclusion of the majority that the permit provisions are not separable from the wage provisions of the statute.

It is a well established rule of law that if a statute is valid in part and invalid in part, then the valid part may stand provided it fairly answers the object or purpose of the passage of the law, and the deletion of the invalid portion will not make the statute meaningless.

The absence of the permit provisions certainly would not make the wage-hour part of the Arkansas overtime statute meaningless. The permit provisions do not affect the statute's substance, but are merely additional aids in enforcement of the wage provisions.

In Brooks v. Wilson, 165 Ark. 477, 265 S.W. 53 (1924), we said:

> . . . [I]f any special provision of an act be unconstitutional and can be stricken out without affecting the validity of the residue of the act, it will be done, and the remainder of the act allowed to stand. Cribbs v. Benedict, 64 Ark. 555, 44 S.W. 707; State v. New York Life Ins. Co., 119 Ark. 314, 171 S.W. 871, 173 S.W. 1099; State v. Woodruff, 120 Ark. 406, 179 S.W. 813; and Davis v. State, 126 Ark. 260, 190 S.W. 436.

See also Levy v. Albright, 204 Ark. 657, 163 S.W.2d 529 (1942).

Therefore, even if the permit provisions are invalidated the remainder of the statute would suffice to effect the object of having employees receive premium pay for overtime work.

Accordingly, I think the case should be reversed and remanded.

APPENDIX B: STATUTES INVOLVED

Ark. Stat. Ann. § 81-601. (Repl. 1960). Maximum hours for women—Overtime pay—Exceptions from act.—No female shall be employed in this State in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment, laundry, or by an express or transportation company, or by any hotel, restaurant, or eating place, or by any building and loan association, insurance company, or by any establishment engaged in finance or credit business, or by any person, persons, partnership, or corporation whatsoever in any capacity except in those occupations that are expressly exempted by law, for more than eight (8) hours in any one [1] day or more than six (6) consecutive days in any one (1) week, unless such female employee receives compensation for her employment in excess of the hours above specified at the rate of not less than one and one-half [1½] times the regular rate at which she is employed and that a permit be secured from the Commissioner of Labor for any overtime of a permanent nature in excess of one hour a day. Provided, however, that the provisions of this act [§§ 81-601—81-603, 81-608—81-619] do not apply to domestic, agricultural or horticultural employees, or those female employers (employees) exempted by Section 13 (a), Paragraph (11) of the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. Provided, further, that the present law governing the employment of children under sixteen (16) years of age shall not be repealed by this Act.

Provided however, there shall be exempted from this Section any employer and the female employees of such employer who is a processor or canner of fruits and vegetables and who is subject to and complies with the provisions of the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 as amended.

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2. Unlawful employment practices—Employer practices.

(a) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—

(1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or

(2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees or applicants for employment in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-7. Nothing in this subchapter shall be deemed to exempt or relieve any person from any liability, duty, penalty, or punishment provided by any present or future law of any State or political subdivision of a State, other than any such law which purports to require or permit the doing of any act which would be an unlawful employment practice under this subchapter.

42 U.S.C. § 2000h-4. Nothing contained in any title of this Act shall be construed as indicating an intent on the part of Congress to occupy the field in which any such title operates to the exclusion of State laws on the same subject matter, nor shall any provision of this Act be construed as invalidating any provision of State law unless such provision is inconsistent with any of the purposes of this Act, or any provision thereof.

29 U.S.C. § 206. (d) (1) No employer having employees subject to any provisions of this section shall discriminate, within any establishment in which such employees are employed, between employees on the basis of sex by paying wages to employees in such establishment at a rate less than the rate at which he pays wages to employees of the opposite sex in such establishment for equal work on jobs the performance of which requires equal skill, effort, and responsibility, and which are performed under similar working conditions, except where such payment is made pursuant to (i) a seniority system; (ii) a merit system; (iii) a system which measures earnings by quantity or quality of production; or (iv) a differential based on any other factor other than sex: Provided, That an employer who is paying a wage rate differential in violation of this subsection shall not, in order to comply with the provisions of this subsection, reduce the wage rate of any employee.

U.S. Const., Art. VI, Cl. 2.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

APPENDIX C:

ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS INVOLVED

29 C.F.R. § 1604.2(b). Effect of sex-oriented state employment legislation.

(1) Many States have enacted laws or promulgated administrative regulations with respect to the employment of females. Among these laws are those which prohibit or limit the employment of females, e.g., the employment of females in certain occupations, in jobs requiring the lifting or carrying of weights exceeding certain prescribed limits, during certain hours of the night, for more than a specified number of hours per day or per week, and for certain periods of time before and after childbirth. The Commission has found that such laws and regulations do not take into account the capacities, preferences, and abilities of individual females and, therefore, discriminate on the basis of sex. The Commission has concluded that such laws and regulations conflict with and are superseded by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Accordingly, such laws will not be considered a defense to an otherwise established unlawful employment practice or as a basis for the application of the bona fide occupational qualification exception.

(2) The Commission has concluded that state laws and regulations which discriminate on the basis of sex with regard to the employment of minors are in conflict with and are superseded by Title VII to the extent that such laws are more restrictive for one sex. Accordingly, restrictions on the employment of minors of one sex over and above those imposed on minors of the other sex will not be considered a defense to an otherwise established unlawful employment practice or as a basis for the application of the bona fide occupational qualification exception.

(3) A number of states require that minimum wage and premium pay for overtime be provided for female employees. An employer will be deemed to have engaged in an unlawful employment practice if:

(i) It refuses to hire or otherwise adversely affects the employment opportunities of female applicants or employees in order to avoid the payment of minimum wages or overtime pay required by state law; or

(ii) It does not provide the same benefits for male employees.

(4) As to other kinds of sex-oriented state employment laws, such as those requiring special rest and meal periods or physical facilities for women, provision of these benefits to one sex only will be a violation of Title VII. An employer will be deemed to have engaged in an unlawful employment practice if:

(i) It refuses to hire or otherwise adversely affects the employment opportunities of female applicants or employees in order to avoid the provision of such benefits; or

(ii) It does not provide the same benefits for male employees. If the employer can prove that business necessity precludes providing these benefits to both men and women, then the state law is in conflict with and superseded by Title VII as to this employer. In this situation, the employer shall not provide such benefits to members of either sex.

(5) Some states require that separate restrooms be provided for employees of each sex. An employer will be deemed to have engaged in an unlawful employment practice if it refuses to hire or otherwise adversely affects the employment opportunities of applicants or employees in order to avoid the provision of such restrooms for persons of that sex.

29 C.F.R. § 1604.8 Relationship of Title VII to the Equal Pay Act.

(a) The employee coverage of the prohibitions against discrimination based on sex contained in Title VII is co-extensive with that of the other prohibitions contained in Title VII and is not limited by Section 703(h) to those employees covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

(b) By virtue of Section 703(h), a defense based on the Equal Pay Act may be raised in a proceeding under Title VII.

(c) Where such a defense is raised the Commission will give appropriate consideration to the interpretations of the Administrator, Wage and Hour Division, Department of Labor, but will not be bound thereby.

29 C.F.R. § 800.162.—Overtime Payments Required by State Law.

The application of the equal pay provisions of the Act may also be affected by State legal requirements with respect to overtime pay. If as a result of a State law, female employees in an employer's establishment are paid overtime premiums for hours worked in excess of a prescribed maximum in any workday or workweek, the employer must pay male employees performing equal work in such establishment the same overtime premiums when they work such excess hours, in order to comply with the equal pay provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. This would be true even though both the male and the female employees performing equal work are otherwise qualified for exemption from the overtime pay requirements of section 7 of the Fair Labor Standards Act. It would not be true, however, unless the overtime requiring the premium pay is actually being worked by the women.

Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
NOV 11 1976
MICHAEL RODAK, JR., CLERK

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1976

No. 76-531

ARKANSAS DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Petitioner,

v.

FAIRFIELD COMMUNITIES LAND COMPANY,
Respondent.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT IN OPPOSITION

WARNER and SMITH
P. O. Box 1626
Fort Smith, Arkansas 72902
By: GERALD L. DeLUNG
Counsel for Respondent

Of Counsel
LILLARD CODY HAYES
WARNER and SMITH
P. O. Box 1626
Fort Smith, Arkansas 72902

St. Louis Law Printing Co., Inc., 812 Olive Street 63101 314-231-4477

INDEX

	Page
Table of Citations	ii
Questions Presented	1
Statutory Provisions Involved	2
Constitutional Provisions Involved	2
Statement of the Case	2
Argument	4
I. There is no major unresolved conflict of legal authority concerning the validity of the type of state legislation involved and there are no momentous legal issues to be decided	4
A. The Arkansas Supreme Court decision in this case is not in conflict with the eighth circuit decision	4
B. There is no "real and embarrassing conflict" as is required for issuance of this writ	6
C. The controlling question involved is essentially a question of state law and the pronouncement of the Arkansas Supreme Court in regard to this question of state law eliminates any precedent value of Potlatch Forest, Inc., v. Hays, or Hays v. Potlatch Forest, Inc.	7
D. This court should deny the writ because there are no momentous legal issues presented in this case	7
E. The decision of the Arkansas Supreme Court certainly should not be set aside because it is in conflict with regulations of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission	8

F. In passing the Civil Rights Act of 1964 Congress intended to pre-empt those state laws that are inconsistent with any purpose of the act or any provision thereof 9

G. The Equal Pay Act cannot be used to perpetuate women's protective laws 10

II. Conclusion 14

TABLE OF CITATIONS

Cases

Doctors Hospital, Inc. v. Recio, 383 F. Supp. 409 (D.C. Puerto Rico, 1974) 7, 8

Homemakers, Inc. v. Division of Industrial Welfare of the State of California, 356 F. Supp. 1111 (1973), 509 F. 2d 20 (9th Cir. 1974) 6, 7, 8, 10

Layne & Company v. Western Well Works, 261 U. S. 387, 43 S. Ct. 422 (1923) 6

Potlatch Forest, Inc., v. Hays, 318 F. Supp. 1368 (E. D. Ark. 1970), 46 F. 2d 1081 (8th Cir. 1972) ..4, 5, 7, 8, 10, 14

Rosenfeld v. Southern Pacific Railway Company, 293 F. Supp. 1219 9

State of Arkansas v. Fairfield Communities Land Company, 538 S.W. 2d 698 (1976) 5, 6, 13

Statutes

Acts 1915, No. 191 of the Acts of Arkansas (Ark. Stats. Ann. §81-601, et seq.) 2, 13

42 U.S.C. §2000e-2(a) 2

42 U.S.C. §2000e-7 ..... 2, 9

42 U.S.C. §2000h-4 ..... 2, 9

29 U.S.C. §206 (d)(1) 2

Constitutional Provisions Involved

Article VI, Clause 2 of the Constitution of the United States 2

Amendment No. XIV, Section 1 2

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1976

No. 76-531

ARKANSAS DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Petitioner,

v.

FAIRFIELD COMMUNITIES LAND COMPANY,
Respondent.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT IN OPPOSITION

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether an Arkansas statute which requires payment of premium pay for overtime work to female employees and not to male employees is invalid under the supremacy clause of the Constitution of the United States as a ban on sex discrimination in employment contained in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and other Federal law?

2. Whether the Arkansas statute in question is a violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Acts 1915, No. 191 of the Acts of Arkansas (Ark. Stats. Ann., § 81-601, et seq.), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-2(a), 2000e-7 and 2000h-4, 29 U.S.C. § 206(d) (1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Article VI, Clause 2; Amendment No. XIV, Sec. 1.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On February 8, 1973, the Arkansas Department of Labor filed a civil action in the Pulaski County Arkansas Circuit Court against the Respondent, Fairfield Communities Land Company, seeking a total of $3,674.04 in unpaid wages for certain employees of the respondent. This case was presented to the lower court on stipulated facts.

The statutes which the respondent was alleged to have violated were Ark. Stats. Ann., § 81-601, et seq., and Ark. Stats. Ann., § 81-603, et seq. These statutes require that female employees be paid time and a half overtime for all hours worked over 8 in one day and on the seventh consecutive day in one week, and further require that permits be obtained from the Arkansas State Department of Labor permitting an employer to work a female in any regular overtime capacity in excess of one hour per day, and prior to permitting a female to work in a managerial capacity. There is no similar requirement for men. The Arkansas law in question pertains only to women.

In an Amended Answer, the respondent contended that the Arkansas statutes were invalid because they had been pre-empted by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, and also because the statutes in question were in violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The lower court found the statutes in question to be unconstitutional and the Supreme Court of Arkansas affirmed.

The Arkansas Supreme Court declined to judicially redraft the Arkansas statutes in question so as to require extension to men of the benefits afforded by the statute only to female employees. The Arkansas Supreme Court held that to do so would be a usurpation of the legislative power.

ARGUMENT: REASONS FOR NOT GRANTING THE WRIT

I. There Is No Major Unresolved Conflict of Legal Authority Concerning the Validity of the Type of State Legislation Involved, and There Are No Momentous Legal Issues to Be Decided.

A. The Arkansas Supreme Court decision in this case is not in conflict with the Eighth Circuit decision.

The petitioner throughout the course of this litigation has failed to recognize the distinction between the case at bar and the case of Potlatch Forest, Inc. v. Hays, 318 F. Supp. 1368 (E.D. Ark. 1970), 46 F. 2d 1081 (8th Cir. 1972). Furthermore, the petitioner has consistently overemphasized the effect and importance of the Potlatch case. The import of the Potlatch case must be limited to the very narrow fact situation before the Federal District Court involved.

In the Potlatch case the employer voluntarily extended to men benefits afforded by the state statute only to women conceding that federal law required it to do so. The decision in the Potlatch case was founded upon the employer's concession.[1] It is

[1] The District Court in Potlatch Forest, Inc. v. Hays, supra, page 1374 noted:

> "The plaintiff (Potlatch) does not ask the court to adjudicate that the Civil Rights Act does not require the payment of daily overtime to men as long as such overtime is being paid to women: indeed plaintiff (Potlatch, the employer) concedes that such a requirement exists and in doing so takes the same position as does the EEOC."

And at page 1374, the court notes that the concession of the Potlatch Corporation was one that is subject to argument:

> "Whether the concession of Potlatch that under federal law it must pay daily overtime to male employees as long as it pays it to female employees is correct as an abstract proposition the court does not now decide. An argument to the contrary could be made that would be plausible at least. But the concession has been made presumably advisedly, and conforms to the view taken by the EEOC and the court will accept it for the purpose of this case."

important that the court in the Potlatch case accepted this concession of the employer only for the purpose of that particular case, Potlatch Forest, Inc. v. Hays, supra, 1374; thus emphasizing the narrow scope of the decision involved.

Since the court in Potlatch Forest, Inc. v. Hays, did not decide the question of whether an employer is required by federal law to extend female benefits to men, it did not have to consider the propriety of "judicial legislation." All parties in the Potlatch case, including the employer, conceded that the Congress of the United States had enacted the necessary legislation to alleviate the conflict.

In regard to the Eighth Circuit decision in the Potlatch case, it should be noted that this court did not consider the issue of whether the overtime laws before it were intended to limit the hours women could work, thereby resulting in a discrimination against women. Hays v. Potlatch Forest, Inc., 465 F. 2d 1082. The reason stated for this was that the question had not been raised below. Here, however, the argument has been raised, and indeed greatly emphasized.

The Arkansas Supreme Court in its decision in the case at bar noted that the courts in the Potlatch case did not properly consider the purpose and effect of the Arkansas statutes, recognizing that the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals treated the Arkansas statute as a wage and hour law having as its sole purpose the payment of female employees at time and a half overtime. State of Arkansas v. Fairfield Communities Land Company, 538 S. W. 2d 698, 699. The Arkansas Supreme Court correctly pointed out that neither of the Federal Court opinions mentioned other aspects of the Arkansas law which it considered to be of controlling weight. State of Arkansas v. Fairfield Communities Land Company, supra, 699. The court was referring here to requirements of the law which compel an employer to obtain a permit from the Department of Labor before employing a woman in an overtime capacity, and other restrictive provisions of the Arkansas law. These provisions clearly make the Arkansas law in question a protective law which discourages employment and denies women employment opportunities. Even the petitioner in its Petition for Writ of Certiorari notes that statutes which expressly, or in effect, deny women employment opportunities are not beneficial and by virtue of Title VII are invalid.[2]

B. There is no "real and embarrassing conflict" as is required for issuance of this writ. Layne and Company v. Western Well Works, 261 U. S. 387, 393, 43 S. Ct. 422, 423 (1923).

The respondent submits that there is no conflict at all between the Ninth Circuit and Eighth Circuit decisions. First, the Potlatch case is easily distinguished on the facts, and secondly, the Arkansas Supreme Court in this case has completely negated any supposed conflict between the Eighth Circuit and Ninth Circuit by virtue of its pronouncement as to the impropriety of extending the benefits of the Arkansas statute.

In the Ninth Circuit case of Homemakers, Inc. v. Division of Industrial Welfare of the State of California, 356 F. Supp. 1111 (1973), 509 F. 2d 20 (9th Cir. 1974), the Ninth Circuit determined that it would be a usurpation of the legislative power for the court to require extension of the benefits afforded by the California statute to men. In that case the employer did not make the concession referred to above, and further contended that the statutes in question discouraged employment and discriminated against women. Neither of these elements were present in the Potlatch case. Both of these elements are present in the case at bar, and again consistently with the Homemakers case the Arkansas Supreme Court has determined that extension of benefits afforded by the state statute would be a usurpation of the legislative function.

[2] See footnote 5 of page 4 of the petitioner's Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

C. The controlling question involved is essentially a question of state law and the pronouncement of the Arkansas Supreme Court in regard to this question of state law eliminates any precedent value of Potlatch Forest, Inc., v. Hays, or Hays v. Potlatch Forest, Inc.

Even if the case of Hays v. Potlatch Forest, Inc., might be considered inconsistent with the decision of the Arkansas Supreme Court the essential question involved is one of state law which should properly be determined by the State Supreme Court. It is certainly within the province of the Arkansas Supreme Court and not the Federal Courts to determine whether the requirements of an Arkansas statute should be extended to men. This is a question of a state court's determination of state law, and if the state court determines that extension of benefits is a usurpation of the legislative function, then the Federal Court must be bound by the state court's ruling. The state court in the case at bar is in effect stating that consistency between the state law and the federal law may not be supplied by judicial extension of benefits afforded by the state statute. Surely, it is not within the province of a Federal Court to "amend" the provisions of a state law to obviate a conflict with federal law. Doctors Hospital, Inc. v. Recio, 383 F. Supp. 409, 417 (1974).

D. This court should deny the writ because there are no momentous legal issues presented in this case.

A review of recent decisions regarding the supposed "extension of benefits rule" demonstrates that the Arkansas Supreme Court in effectively negating the precedential value of the Potlatch decision has done away with the last vestige of supposed adherence to this cumbersome theory as a means of validating state protective legislation. There is an overwhelming tide of judicial precedent throughout the nation invalidating state protective legislation which provides benefits to women not afforded to men, and confirming that such legislation is inconsistent with Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and in violation of the Equal Protection Clause.[3] There is in actuality no viable authority confirming the petitioner's position. The respondent submits that the petitioner has failed to cite any decision accepting the contrived "extension of benefits" theory supposedly advanced by the Potlatch court.

E. The decision of the Arkansas Supreme Court certainly should not be set aside because it is in conflict with regulations of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Very little needs to be said about this contention except that the authorization given to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission by Congress is to issue procedural regulations. This authority and the regulations issued in accordance therewith certainly does not have the force of law. Such authority does not include the power to issue regulations which would affect substantive state law. Homemakers, Inc., v. Division of Industrial Welfare of the State of California, supra, 1113,22.

---

[3] See the recent case of Doctors Hospital, Inc. v. Recio, 383 F. Supp. 409 (1974), which provides an exhaustive treatment of this subject and cites numerous cases including Attorney General opinions that have held state protective statutes to be invalid as being in conflict with Title VII.

F. In passing the Civil Rights Act of 1964 Congress intended to pre-empt those state laws that are inconsistent with any purpose of the act or any provision thereof.

It has been noted that the purpose afforded to U.S.C.A., Sec. 2000e-7 and 2000h-4 (the Congressional Declaration of Non-Pre-Emptive Intent) was essentially to assure preservation of state anti-discrimination laws and not to save inconsistent laws. Rosenfeld v. Southern Pacific Railroad Company, 293 F. Supp. 1219, 1226. It has further been pointed out that Title VII's anti-pre-emption provision was added to the Act before sex was added as a forbidden category for discrimination. The provision clearly was intended to preserve intact State Fair Employment Practice laws. Volume 84 Harvard Law Review 1109, 1191.

The petitioner, however, is correct in stating that "the best test of what congress intended is what Congress said."[4] In examining the language in the pre-emption disclaimers contained in the Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C. §2000e-7 and §2000h-4), it should be noted:

2000e-7:

> "Nothing in this title shall be deemed to exempt or relieve any person from any liability, duty, penalty or punishment provided by any present or future law of any state or political subdivision of a state, other than any such law which purports to require or permit the doing of any act which would be an unlawful employment practice under this title."

Similarly, 2000h-4:

> "Nothing contained in any title of this Act shall be construed as indicating an intent on the part of Congress to > occupy the field in which any such title operates to the exclusion of state laws on the same subject matter, nor shall any provision of this Act be construed as invalidating any provision of state law, unless such provision is inconsistent with any act or the purpose of this Act, or any provision thereof."

---

[4] Page 9 of petitioner's Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

In examining what Congress has said, therefore, it is plain and obvious that the Arkansas statute involved is squarely and hopelessly in conflict with the Civil Rights Act of 1964 which expressly prohibits discrimination based on sex.

Petitioner has never argued that Title VII and the Arkansas statutes involved are consistent. The obvious reason is because of the absolute inconsistency. However, from the petitioner's quotation of Congressman McCulloch[5] it is obvious that the petitioner fails to recognize that the Arkansas statute is discriminatory and discourages the employment of women. As is clearly reflected in the Arkansas Supreme Court's decision, the earlier Arkansas Supreme Court decision of State v. Crow, 130 Ark. 272, 197 S.W. 4 (1917), and even in the Potlatch case, this was clearly the purpose of the statute—to discourage female employment. The statute, if not invalidated, therefore, will certainly grant and insure lesser rights than those required by the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

G. The Equal Pay Act cannot be used to perpetuate women's protective laws.

It should be noted at the outset that there has been a judicial determination that the Equal Pay Act does not require the extension to men of overtime benefits afforded to women by state protective statutes. Homemaker v. Division of Industrial

[5] Page 11 of the Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

Welfare, supra. However, the petitioner insists that these laws may be saved despite their otherwise clear and irreconcilable conflict with the Civil Rights Act, through a judicial revision of startling scope and consequence. This, the Arkansas Supreme Court refused to do.

The "extension of benefits" theory, which petitioner believes should be followed to accomplish this turnabout, cannot be properly utilized where its consequence, as here, is not only to ignore, but indeed, to reverse the undoubted intent of the Arkansas Legislature.

The inappropriateness of rewriting the Arkansas law was clear to the Court below, and a reiteration of the arguments involved before the Arkansas Supreme Court would necessarily involve a detailed reargument of the merits. The respondent will not attempt to do this, but will briefly respond to the new emphasis being placed upon the Equal Pay Act by the petitioner in its Petition for Certiorari.

The new emphasis upon the Equal Pay Act by the petitioner involves the relationship between the Equal Pay Act and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. The petitioner notes in its brief as follows:[6]

> "The substantive section of the Equal Pay Act of 1963 includes a proviso: 'An employer who is paying a wage rate differential in violation of this subsection shall not, in order to comply with the provisions of this subsection, reduce the wage rate of any employee.' 29 U.S.C. § 206 (d)(1)."

The petitioner would read the language quoted above into Title VII of the Civil Right Act of 1964, and contends that "There are substantial reasons to conclude that Title VII must be read in the light of this condition." The petitioner then attempts to establish Congress' intent not to lower wages of female employees as a consquence of remedying sex discrimination in employment by citing various statements of members of Congress taken from the Congressional Record. Again, the respondent submits that Congress has stated in plain, unambiguous language that provisions of a state law which are "inconsistent" with the provisions of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 are invalid, and that they are not saved by the pre-emption disclaimers in Section 2000e-7 and 2000h-4 of said Act. Neither the opinions of the various members of Congress cited by petitioner, nor the cases cited by petitioner in this respect, bear directly upon the so-called "Extension of Benefits" doctrine. As a matter of fact, both the case of Shultz v. Wheaton Glass Co., 421 F. 2d 259, 266; and the case of Orr v. Frank R. MacNeill & Sons, Inc., 511 F. 2d 166, 170, cited by petitioner for the proposition that the "Extension of Benefits" doctrine must be read into Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, deal with job classification problems under the wage and hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. The intent of Congress was to pre-empt and invalidate provisions of state law "inconsistent" with the provisions of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Having failed to convince the Arkansas Supreme Court that it should rewrite the Arkansas statutes so as to judicially legislate the same benefits for men as were offered to women under the Arkansas Women's Protection Law, the petitioner would now have this Court change what Congress wrote so that no conflict would exist between Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Arkansas women's protection statutes.

[6] Page 11 of the Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

Another answer to petitioner's argument in this respect is that the respondent in this case has not paid a wage rate differential. Had the respondent been paying the wage rate differential, this law suit would have never been brought. There has never been an assertion in this case that there has been a violation of the Equal Pay Act. Consequently, the Equal Pay Act is not relevant to the questions presented by this case.

Further, Petitioner's argument that the Equal Pay Act may be interpreted and read together with Title VII to provide consistency between Title VII and the state laws in question, treats as discriminatory only the premium payment aspect of the Arkansas Statutes. The Arkansas Statutes involved, however, are protective laws which were intended to discourage and regulate female employment. There is a second phase, therefore, of the Arkansas Statutes which is discriminatory also. There are provisions which require the employer to apply to the State Department of Labor prior to working a female in an overtime capacity.[7] This permit requirement places an additional burden on an employer and would certainly discourage an employer from hiring an equally qualified female job applicant. This is a requirement that the Arkansas Supreme Court noted to be inseparable from the remainder of the Act in question. State of Arkansas v. Fairfield Communities Land Company, supra, 700. Its determination in regard to the severability of this provision must be regarded as controlling as a matter of State law to be properly determined by the State Supreme Court. There is no

---

[7] Ark. Stats. Ann., 81-601 provides pertinently as follows:

"No female shall be employed in this state in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment, laundry, or by an express or transportation company, or by any hotel, restaurant, or eating place, or any building and loan association, insurance company, or by any establishment engaged in finance or credit business, or by any person, persons, partnership, or corporation whatsoever in any capacity except in those occupations that are expressly exempted by law, for more than eight (8) hours in any one day or more than six (6) consecutive days in any one (1) week, unless such female employee receives compensation for her employment in excess of the hours above specified at the rate of not less than one and one half times the regular rate at which she is employed, and that a permit be secured from the Commissioner of Labor for any overtime of a permanent nature in excess of one hour a day." mandate in the Equal Pay Act which may be used as a basis of negating the onerous and discriminatory effect of the permit provision.

II. CONCLUSION

There are no momentous issues presented in this case. As noted above, the law regarding the questions presented here has in recent years become firmly established. In keeping with the spirit of the Equal Rights Movement for Women, women's protective laws have been consistently declared unconstitutional. Although again the respondent emphasizes that the Potlatch case does not actually stand for extension of benefits, it is further submitted that the Arkansas State Supreme Court decision in this case lays to rest the last vestige of any supposed endorsement of this contrived theory.

The Arkansas Supreme Court decision points out very clearly that the obvious intention of the Legislature in enacting the law in question was to protect the health and welfare of women. It was not to create a wage and hours law. The petitioners would have this court require the Arkansas Supreme Court to redraft Arkansas law in such a way as to create an entirely new class of beneficiaries and to completely eliminate the legislative purpose of the law. The extent to which the Arkansas legislation should be re-drafted is clearly a determination that should be made by the Arkansas State Supreme Court.

Furthermore, the argument of the petitioner attempts to leave the impression that the Arkansas State Supreme Court decision eliminates the payment of adequate wages to women. This is simply not true. Many arrangements for such premium pay are based upon private agreement of employer and employee without the intervention of governmental mandate. Others result from collective bargaining agreements. Most importantly, however, premium pay for overtime work is required by the Fair Labor Standards Act which prescribes payment at the rate of time and a half for work in excess of 40 hours per week.

The denial of the Petition for Writ of Certiorari will leave male and female employees in the State of Arkansas to be treated equally with respect to overtime, and there will be no reason either by virtue of the additional payment required or by virtue of the permit requirement for an employer to discriminate against a woman when considering her in an employment opportunity situation.

Respectfully submitted,

WARNER and SMITH

By: GERALD L. DeLUNG
P.O. Box 1626
Fort Smith, Arkansas 72902
Counsel for Respondent

Of Counsel:

LILLARD CODY HAYES
WARNER and SMITH
P.O. Box 1626
Fort Smith, Arkansas 72902